Adolf Hitler's Mein Kampf
By Kurt Halbritter
Published by Hanser Verlag 1975

Halbritter is a cartoonist. This is a picture book about the everyday life of the Third Reich, "Drawn memories of a great time" (as the subtitle), many ironic illustrations to guide "Mein Kampf" and people's mentality that actually say more than many thousands of words a writer. He exaggerates, distorts only slightly, poignant quotes from the dictionary of the fellow.

THE GREATEST OF EXPOSITIONS

1904 Saint Louis World's Fair

Published by Riverside Press, St. Louis, 1975

For seven months in 1904, St. Louis was the greatest city on earth. Millions flocked to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition to behold the inventions of the early 20th century. Many saw electric lights, automobiles, aircraft, and moving pictures for the first time. At a time when few traveled more than a couple miles from home, visitors encountered the people and cultures. St. Louis: The 1904 World's Fair tells the story of the greatest Victorian-era world's fair since the lights of the fair faded over a century ago, while also examining the fair's legacies and legends.

Hold Dear, As Always

Edited and translated from German by Adolf E. Schroeder

Published by University of Missouri Press, 1988

Henriette Geisberg Bruns was twenty-three when she arrived in 1836 at the isolated Westphalia Settlement in central Missouri with her husband, baby son, two brothers, and a maid. Jette, as she was known to her family and friends, had not come to America by inclination, but from duty. Her husband Bernhard, a physician, had fallen victim to the emigration fever sweeping Germany in the 1830's and was convinced that he could provide a better life for his family in the American Free States.
